

RECOMMENDED SOURCES FOR NATIVE PLANTS

We hope the following information is helpful to gardeners who want to grow native plants without threatening natural populations. To the best of our knowledge, all nurseries listed here propagate their own plants. At the North Carolina Botanical Garden, we refer to conservation-oriented practices, such as propagating native plants (as opposed to collecting them from the wild), as conservation through propagation.

Conservation through propagation helps you and the environment by:

- Supporting and encouraging ethical nursery growers
- Assisting in the survival of native species in the wild by discouraging collection in our natural areas

Enhancing your garden with the beauty of nursery-propagated native plants that are more likely to survive than transplants from the wild, providing you with more value dollar for dollar.

The North Carolina Botanical Garden conducts a daily Plant Sale from March through October, where we offer staff- and volunteer-propagated native plants.

This list is intended as a guide for native plant gardeners and is by no means complete. It is impossible for us to list all the nurseries that propagate their own native plants. If you have questions or comments, contact us at:

Many nurseries require — and we strongly suggest — that you make an appointment for your visit. If a nursery does not list a catalog price, send a business-sized self-addressed stamped envelope for return of price list or other information.
